There once lived a Snake and a Lizard. They both thought that they were better than everyone. They challenged each other to a race.

The lizard said he would win because he was faster but the snake didn't say anything because the lizard was right, he was faster.

The snake called some of his friends over and told them his plan. They thought it would work but one of the lizard's friend were listening. He said that will not work because his friend was to fast and he never gets tired.

He said I won't tell him your plan because I know I won't work. The snake was happy he would not tell him his plan. He wonderd if his plan would work. He said lets try it! So they lined up at the starting line and boom the whistle went. The lizard started going, the snake did not. Then the lizard got tired so the snake went slow and the snake ended up winning.
